No other railroad in this country has retained its historical equipment and honored its past like Union Pacific. The preservation of our fleet speaks to the high value we place on our heritage and its role in America's history. Dating back to 1912, the fleet, and most of the passenger cars, are a half century old - built during the height of passenger train travel. Each car is unique and chronicles a different chapter of Union Pacific's past. For more than a century, they've transported iconic individuals (presidents and senators, generals and soldiers, artists and architects, singers and actors) ... people who influenced and transformed America.
