Dear RBAN Member,

As the economy appears to become more challenging by the day, RBAN Network members ask, "How do we continue to assist businesses in these challenging times and work to keep our region stable?" It is important to create a strategy that is flexible enough to adjust to changes in the economy yet still aggressive enough to create a positive impact on the local economy, businesses and the workforce.

At our next RBAN meeting to be held on October 27th at the Santa Anita Park Racetrack, Bruce Ackerman of the California Association for Local Economic Development (CALED) will give a brief overview of the state-wide economic development strategy. Immediately following Mr.

→ International Economic Development Council: "...Business is Grinding to a Halt."

"A study of nearly 5,000 economic development professionals was conducted the the International Economic Development Council (IEDC), the world's largest organization for economic developers.

A majority of economic development professionals around the country indicate that their local communities are suffering as a result of the recent financial crisis and that economic development projects are grinding to a halt, as indicated by:

- Halted or delayed real estate development projects
- Reduced consumer spending
- Insufficient credit for business
- Reduced business spending
- Halted or delayed investment attraction projects
- Halted or delayed expansion plans"
